Gladstone's Eloquence.

RIS WONDERFUL PERFORMANCES IN SCOTLAND—A LOOK AT THE RESULTS.

A correspondent of the Nation, writing from London, says: Whatever its intrinsic merits, Mr. Gładstone's fortnight of speaking and travelling was as wonderful a performance as the world has ever seen. It is unique, and is likely to remain so unless Mr. Gładstone supplies a parallel to his own achievement or makes an advance upon it. The shownan in the Spectator (the Spectator of Addison & Steele, not of Wellington of Addison & Steele, not of Wellington street, Strand) described his beast as "the largest elephant in the world except himself," Mr. Gładstone's claims to preemiself." Mr. Gładstone's claims to preemiself. The shownan in the Spectator (the Spectator of Addison & Steele, not of Wellington street, Strand) described his beast as "the largest elephant in the world except himself, and a famous northern polititician were present. It occurred about the time President Johnson was "swinging round the circle," and the probabilities of his impeachment were then discussed. Somehow the conversation turned to the difference between the real character of bistorical celebrities and their established reputation after death.

Chandler expressed an opinion that is often uttered in literary circles among men who have made Revolutionary history a special study—that Washington was a man of quite ordinary intellect, and by far the most grossly over-estimated man in every way in all modern history.

"Oh, yes," said the other gentleman"; he was neither more nor less than a man of pire, leaving only dust and asses being it? This is not probable, so far as Scotland is concerned. The Scotch nature seems to have been in Mr. Gladstone's hands wax to receive; by its intrinsic qualities it is marble to retain. Behind the thousands and tens of thousands who deal of politicians, and I tell you, —, I beard him are hundreds of thousands who never in all my life met a cunninger and craftler politician than Abe Lincoln, and houses and in the back-parlors of town shop-keepers cheap editions of minded man—as honest Old Abe." speeches are being pored over for time as only Burns and the Bible are conned. But Scotland was safe already. The reaction of 1874 extended to but few counties and boroughs, and these would have been won back without the transcendent effort which Mr. Gladstone has put forth. On the northern side of the Tweed be was preaching to the converted. But his speeches, though made in Scotland, were really made to the whole United Kingare, of course, numerous exceptions of disapproval and admiration in every class. Among what we call here the higher order-among the aristocracy, the permanent officials, and the wealthier middle classes alienation and repulsion. Among the Non-conformists, a certain portion of the High-Church party, the shop-keepers, and the working classes, they have stured a herowership something akin to the devotion of the Irish to O'Connell in his palmy days. man belongs to the aristocracy, or is adepted by them, and Mr. Bright, who adepted by them, and Mr. Bright, who "Thuringia again." "That's nice," said he, looking round. some years ago was as ignorant as Cetewayo of the use and meaning of a dresscoat, is now the guest of Wa'mer Castle and of Chatsworth. The classes whom Mr. Gladstone has somewhat repelled were the classes which needed to be won over; the classes whose arder and energy be has stim-ulated were his already. To the former, the course which he has followed of late years has exhibited the conversion of the statesman into a demagogue. To the latter states man into a demagogue. To the latter it has seemed like the elevation of the states man into the prophet. Mr. Gladstone, to a large portion of the people of England, is a preacher of political righteouspiess. They regard him as being essentially the states and did not take it. Went to breakfast, The Nihillists had placed two torpedoes on the states but I did not step on them. The Self-Collected in the Face of Beath. At Medine, ye-terday, Peter Gersbacker, a railroad man, who resides in this city, had an almost miraculous escape from being crushed to death under a freight train with which he was braking. While making a coupling in a moving train his foot caught in the guard-rail and he was unable to extricate it. The train continued to back, and if he had thrown himself outside of the rails, as most persons would have done, both legs would have been crushed. Instead, he threw his body between the rails under the moving train, and, as the brake-rod passed over him, grasped it, and was pulled along with the train. His right foot was crushed, but his nerve did not leave him, and the injured member was drawn from the boot. but his nerve did not leave him, and the injured member was drawn from the boot.

The train was soon stopped, and he was extricated. His foot was dressed, and he was brought home to day. His companions say it was the most remarkable case of presence of mind which they have ever witnessed on the railroad. To it Mr. Gersbacker owes the life.

In a series of interviews between a reporter of the 8sn Francisco Chronicle and Mr. James Redpath, the latter talks quite freely about distinguished politicians and lecturers with whom he has been acquainted. He speaks of an interview at the nouse of Zach. Chandler, in Detroit, at which Chandler, himself, and a famous northern politician were present. It occurred about the
